Inhibition of Ige-Mediated Allergies By A Human Ige-Derived Oligopeptide

EA Padlan, et al. (NIDDK).

DHHS Reference No. E-233-95/1; PCT/US97/22348 filed 05 Dec 97.

Licensing Contact: Stephen Finley, 301/496-7735 ext. 215.

It is estimated that 40 million people have some form of allergy and 14.9 million people have asthma in the United States. This technology identifies a specific amino acid sequence of the IgE molecule that when conformationally constrained inhibits the release of histamine and resulting inflammatory symptoms associated with hay fever and asthma, typical in people suffering from Type I hypersensitivity. This type of response occurs when an allergen triggers B cells to produce allergen-specific IgE antibodies. When binding to receptors on mast cells, these antibodies trigger the release of histamine and the resulting inflammatory symptoms. However when the IgE molecule is conformationally constrained by the addition of a cys residue at the amino acid terminal end and three amino acids at the carboxyl terminal end, the immune response is inhibited. The invention has applications for both of these high prevalence chronic diseases and could possibly be utilized as a vaccine for treatment of these problems.

Method of Treating Cancer Using C-26-Modified Epibryostatin

P Blumbert, Z Szallasi, GR Pettit (NCI).

Serial No. 60/013,740 filed 20 Mar 96; PCT/US97/04515 filed 30 Mar 97.

Licensing Contact: Girish Barua, 301/496-7735 ext. 263.

The invention relates to the use of 26-epibryostatin 1 and related compounds as cancer therapeutics. The compound is related to bryostatin 1 which has shown promise against melanoma but which has significant toxicity. The inventors have discovered that the antineoplastic activity of the bryostatins in a melanoma model system is not mediated by activation of protein kinase C (PKC) as previously believed. This has led to the discovery of antineoplastic activity in the lead compound, which with its reduced binding affinity for PKC would not have been expected to show such activity. The combination of antineoplastic activity with reduced affinity for PKC, which would be expected to translate into reduced toxicity compared to bryostatin 1, could lead to a significant clinical advantage of 26-epibryostatin-1 and analogues over bryostatin 1.
