Proposed Project: "Reactions to Race" Module for the General Social Survey (GSS)—New—National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion (NCCDPHP), Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

The purpose of this data collection is to understand some of the contextual, perceptual, and experiential factors associated with reactions to "race" that may contribute to racial disparities in health outcomes. CDC will fund "Reactions to Race" data collection on the 2004 General Social Survey (GSS). The Measures of Racism Working Group at CDC developed a 10-question module in the GSS.

The GSS is a biennial national population-based in-person survey conducted by the National Opinion Research Center (NORC) at the University of Chicago. GSS first data collection was in 1972. The basic purpose of the GSS is to continue "to gather data on contemporary American society in order to monitor and explain trends and constants in attitudes, behaviors, and attributes; to examine the structure and functioning of society in general as well as the role played by relevant subgroups; to compare the United States to other societies in order to place American society in comparative perspective and develop cross-national models of human society; and to make high-quality data easily accessible to scholars, students, policy makers, and others, with minimal cost and waiting" (see <http://www.norc.uchicago.edu/projects/gensoc1.asp>).

CDC is contracting with NORC through an existing agreement to administer the "Reactions to Race" module to the full GSS sample, consisting of 3,000 non-institutionalized U.S. adults, starting in June 2004. The questionnaire will be administered in-person by trained interviewers who have been "race"-matched with the predominant "race" of residents in each sampled area.

The distributions of responses to the questions on the "Reactions to Race" module will be examined across all respondents as well as compared by "race". In addition, we will look at the relationship between the responses from the "Reactions to Race" module and responses to other health, attitude, and behavior questions (including a detailed assessment of experiences at work) on the 2004 GSS. These other data will provide a rich resource to help us contextualize responses to the module.

Ultimately, the results from this data collection will be useful as we examine the causes of and design interventions to eliminate racial and ethnic health disparities. There are no costs to respondents.

Respondent	Number of respondents	Number of responses/respondent	Avg. burden/response (in hours)	Total burden (in hours)
U.S. Adults	3,000	1	5/60	250
Total	250
