Background and Purpose

Currently, applicable regulations that address reducing the risk of oil spills exist in 33 CFR subchapter O and in 46 CFR subchapter D. Section 702 of the Coast Guard Authorization Act of 2010 requires the Coast Guard to promulgate additional regulations to reduce the risks of oil spills in operations involving the transfer of oil from or to a tank vessel (Pub. L. 111-281, codified at 46 U.S.C. 3703 Note). In accordance with section 702, the Coast Guard intends to focus on operations that have the highest risks of discharge, including operations at night and in inclement weather. We are considering whether or not to establish new or amend existing regulations for the use of equipment, such as putting booms in place for transfers, safety, and environmental impacts; and operational procedures such as manning standards, communication protocols, and restrictions on operations in high-risk areas. We are also taking into account the safety of personnel and effectiveness of available procedures and equipment for preventing or mitigating transfer spills.

Request for Comments

We seek public input and assistance in identifying appropriate issues to assist reducing the risks of oil spills in operations involving the transfer of oil from or to a tank vessel. We request input on the following questions:

1. In addition to operations at night and inclement weather, what other oil transfer operations to or from tank vessels have the highest risk of spilling oil?

2. What measures should the Coast Guard implement to reduce the spillage of oil from other high-risk operations conducted during oil transfer operations to or from tank vessels?

3. What measures should the Coast Guard implement to reduce spillage of oil from oil transfers conducted to or from tank vessels at night?

4. What measures should the Coast Guard implement to reduce spillage of oil from oil transfers conducted to or from tank vessels during periods of inclement weather?

5. What additional equipment should the Coast Guard require to reduce oil spills from oil transfers to or from tank vessels, improve safety for personnel involved in oil transfer operations to or from tank vessels, and protect the marine environment from oil spilled during oil transfers to or from tank vessels; and what requirements should the Coast Guard impose for use of the equipment to help reduce oil spilled during oil transfers to or from tank vessels?

6. What operational requirements (e.g., manning standards, communications protocols, and restrictions on operations in high-risk areas) should the Coast Guard require to reduce oil spills from oil transfers conducted to or from tank vessels?

7. What improvements are needed to ensure the safety of personnel involved in oil transfers conducted to or from tank vessels or in the cleanup of spills associated with oil transfers to or from tank vessels?

8. How effective are the existing procedures and equipment for preventing or mitigating oil spills from oil transferred to or from tank vessels?

9. How do existing federal requirements¹ differ from state requirements for oil transfers conducted to or from tank vessels?

10. Does compliance with any known state oil transfer regulations interfere with existing federal requirements for prevention of pollution of oil transfers for vessels or facilities transferring oil to or from tank vessels?

11. What international and industry consensus standards should the Coast Guard consider incorporating or conforming to, to further prevent oil spills from tank vessels engaged in oil transfer operations?

12. Are there conflicts or areas of improvement with regard to regulations in Title 33 of the Code of Federal Regulations covering waterfront facility oil transfer regulations that will further prevent oil spills from oil transferred to or from tank vessels?

This notice is issued under authority of 5 U.S.C. 552(a), 33 U.S.C. 1231, and 46 U.S.C. 3703 Note.

F.J. Sturm,

Acting Director of Commercial Regulations and Standards, U.S. Coast Guard.
